vendors, legal consultants, contractors, and owners. This year is different. For the first time since 1982, the IRS has broken out non-employee compensation into a separate form: the 1099-NEC. In this post, we'll cover what the new form is, how it affects the existing 1099-MISC, and what the net impact is for property managers.

~~The new 1099-NEC and what it means for property managers ...~~

No need to file a vendor or owner 1099 when the payments in a calendar year total less than $600 or were made to purchase goods not services. In addition, there are a few additional exceptions to the 1099 requirements for property managers. 1099-MISC Exception: 1099s need not be filed if the rental property owner is a corporation. This means if a corporation owns the rental property, you do not need to submit a 1099 MISC form to document owner distributions sent to the corporation.
